

Conference Theme

The Quranic text has been an everlasting source for researchers and contemplators due to its miraculous nature, eloquence, and clarity. It stands unparalleled as the first Arabic text, with its profound eloquence, meticulous structure, and the secrets of its arrangement. Despite the exhaustive efforts of Arabic and Orientalist scholars, who have deployed their scientific and cognitive capacities to uncover its mysteries and reveal its enigmas, this text repeatedly refuses to fully disclose all its secrets, despite the various linguistic, rhetorical, critical, and religious approaches applied to its study.

The problematic of this seminar stems from a fundamental idea rooted in the contemporary linguistic study's capability to approach the Quranic discourse. What are the aspects that linguistics can study while addressing the Quranic discourse? What are the essential questions that linguistic study can tackle in its interaction with the Quranic text? What are the linguistic and non-linguistic forms of miraculousness that can be uncovered?
