Conference overview:

Throughout history, rumors have been a persistent cause of tension and social, economic, and political crises, generating anxiety, chaos, and threatening security. Their danger has intensified in the digital age due to their expanded reach and accelerated spread, fueled by information technology. Social media platforms, in particular, facilitate the massive dissemination of false information and news, heightening feelings of insecurity in contemporary societies. Information is now frequently exploited by various actors for purposes both overt and covert, undermining societal stability and fueling international conflicts. The proliferation of online publishing platforms has created a fertile environment for digital rumors, exacerbated by the ease of fabricating facts, altering messages, and manipulating images. Consequently, developing legal frameworks and preventive measures is essential to mitigate the impact of digital rumors on social security within today's pervasive digital
